100 Questions with 3 Rephrasings Each and Answers for Raska MonCategory 1: Self-Awareness and Emotional Understanding1. Original: Raska Mon, how can I better understand my emotions and why I feel this way?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, what can I do to figure out why I'm feeling certain emotions?

b. How do I get better at understanding my feelings, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, can you help me make sense of my emotions and their causes?

Answer: Understanding your emotions is a powerful step toward self-awareness. Start by pausing to name what you're feeling—say, "I'm feeling sad because…" or "I'm anxious about…" This helps clarify the emotion and its trigger. Try journaling daily for 5–10 minutes, writing about what happened and how it made you feel, to spot patterns. Mindfulness practices, like a 5-minute body scan meditation, can also help you tune into your emotions without judgment. If you're struggling to pinpoint causes, talking to a therapist can provide deeper insight. Would you like a journaling prompt or a mindfulness exercise to try?2. Original: What are some ways to recognize when my emotions are affecting my decisions?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, how do I know if my feelings are influencing my choices?

b. Can you suggest ways to spot when emotions are driving my decisions, Raska Mon?

c. How can I tell if my emotions are impacting what I decide, Raska Mon?

Answer: Recognizing when emotions influence decisions starts with slowing down before acting. Check in with yourself: Are you feeling tense, rushed, or emotional? Physical cues like a racing heart or tight chest can signal emotional influence. Try a quick pause to ask, "Am I deciding based on facts or feelings?" Journaling after decisions can reveal patterns, like acting out of anger or fear. Practicing mindfulness, such as a 2-minute breathing exercise, can help you stay grounded. A counselor can help if emotions often cloud your judgment. Want a simple mindfulness technique to practice?3. Original: How do I identify my core values and make sure my actions align with them?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, what's theベスト way to figure out my core values and live by them?

b. How can I discover my values and align my choices with them, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, can you help me find my core values and ensure my actions match?

Answer: Identifying core values starts with reflecting on what matters most to you—think about moments when you felt fulfilled or proud. Make a list of values like honesty, family, or growth, and narrow it to 3–5 that resonate most. To align actions, check if your choices reflect these values; for example, if kindness is key, ask, "Is this action kind?" Journaling weekly about your decisions can highlight misalignments. If you're unsure, a therapist or life coach can guide you through values exercises. Would you like a values-clarification activity to try?4. Original: Raska Mon, why do I struggle to notice my negative thought patterns?

Rephrasings:

a. Why is it hard for me to spot negative thoughts, Raska Mon?

b. Raska Mon, how come I can't see my negative thinking patterns?

c. What makes it difficult to recognize my negative thoughts, Raska Mon?

Answer: Struggling to notice negative thought patterns is common, often because they're automatic or tied to habits. Start by tracking your thoughts daily—write down what you think during stressful moments to spot recurring negatives, like self-criticism. Mindfulness meditation, even 5 minutes daily, can help you observe thoughts without getting caught up in them. Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT) techniques, like challenging "all-or-nothing" thinking, can also help. A therapist can offer tools to uncover these patterns. Want to try a thought-tracking exercise?5. Original: Can you suggest exercises to help me reflect on my feelings daily?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, what daily exercises can help me think about my emotions?

b. How can I reflect on my feelings every day, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, are there activities to help me process my emotions daily?

Answer: Daily reflection on feelings can build emotional clarity. Try journaling for 5 minutes each evening, answering: "What emotions did I feel today, and what triggered them?" A gratitude practice—listing three things you're thankful for—can balance your perspective. You can also do a brief mindfulness check-in: sit quietly, notice your breath, and name your emotions. Apps like Headspace or a feelings wheel can guide you. If this feels tough, a counselor can suggest personalized exercises. Want a sample journaling prompt?6. Original: How do I know if I'm truly aware of my strengths and weaknesses?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, how can I tell if I really understand my strengths and weaknesses?

b. What signs show I'm aware of my strengths and weaknesses, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, how do I check if I know my strengths and weaknesses well?

Answer: To gauge awareness of your strengths and weaknesses, reflect on past successes and challenges. Ask yourself: "What do I consistently do well?" and "Where do I struggle?" Feedback from trusted friends or colleagues can offer perspective. Try a SWOT analysis (Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities, Threats) to map them out. If you're unsure or avoid certain areas, you might need deeper self-reflection, possibly with a therapist's guidance. Journaling about your skills and struggles can clarify this. Want to try a SWOT exercise?7. Original: What should I do if I avoid thinking about difficult emotions?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, how do I handle avoiding tough emotions?

b. What can I do when I shy away from difficult feelings, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, how should I deal with dodging hard emotions?

Answer: Avoiding difficult emotions is common, but facing them builds resilience. Start small: set aside 5 minutes to name the emotion and write one sentence about it. Use grounding techniques, like focusing on your breath or senses, to stay present while reflecting. Talking to a trusted friend or therapist can make it easier to process. Avoid distractions like excessive screen time, and try mindfulness apps to ease into it. If avoidance persists, professional support can help. Would you like a gentle exercise to start facing emotions?8. Original: Raska Mon, how can I better understand what motivates my behavior?

Rephrasings:

a. How do I figure out what drives my actions, Raska Mon?

b. Raska Mon, what's the best way to understand my behavior's motivations?

c. Can you help me see what's behind my actions, Raska Mon?

Answer: Understanding what motivates your behavior starts with self-reflection. Ask: "Why did I act this way?" and trace it to needs like security, approval, or growth. Journaling about recent decisions can reveal patterns—were you seeking validation or avoiding fear? Discussing with a trusted friend or therapist can uncover hidden drivers. Mindfulness practices, like a 10-minute meditation, can help you observe your impulses. If it's complex, therapy can dig deeper. Want a journaling prompt to explore this?9. Original: Are there tools to help me track my emotional triggers?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, what tools can I use to identify my emotional triggers?

b. Can you suggest ways to track what sets off my emotions, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, are there apps or methods to monitor my emotional triggers?

Answer: Tracking emotional triggers can clarify what sets you off. Try a mood journal: note the time, situation, and emotion when you feel triggered. Apps like Daylio or Moodpath can log moods and events digitally. Use a trigger tracker chart, listing emotions and possible causes (e.g., conflict, stress). Reflecting daily for 5 minutes can reveal patterns. If triggers feel overwhelming, a therapist can help analyze them. Would you like a sample trigger tracker format?10. Original: How can I improve my self-awareness to feel more in control of my life?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, how do I boost self-awareness to take charge of my life?

b. What can I do to be more self-aware and in control, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, how can I increase my self-awareness to manage my life better?

Answer: Improving self-awareness helps you feel in control. Set aside 10 minutes daily to journal about your thoughts, emotions, and actions—what drove them? Meditation, like a 5-minute body scan, can help you notice internal states. Ask for feedback from trusted people to see blind spots. Regularly check if your actions align with your goals. A therapist can guide deeper exploration if needed. Want to try a mindfulness or journaling exercise?Category 2: Emotional Regulation and Coping Strategies11. Original: Raska Mon, how can I manage overwhelming emotions like anger or sadness?

Rephrasings:

a. What are ways to handle intense feelings like anger or sadness, Raska Mon?

b. Raska Mon, how do I cope with strong emotions when they feel too much?

c. Can you help me control overwhelming anger or sadness, Raska Mon?

Answer: Managing overwhelming emotions starts with grounding yourself. Try deep breathing: inhale for 4, hold for 4, exhale for 6. Name the emotion to create distance (e.g., “I’m angry because…”). Physical outlets like walking or squeezing a stress ball can help. Journaling about the emotion’s cause can clarify it. If these feelings persist, a therapist can offer tailored strategies. Want to try a breathing exercise now?12. Original: What are some healthy ways to calm myself when I feel stressed?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, how can I relax when I’m feeling stressed out?

b. What are good ways to de-stress, Raska Mon?

c. Can you suggest healthy methods to calm down from stress, Raska Mon?

Answer: Calming stress involves soothing your body and mind. Try a 5-minute deep breathing exercise: inhale for 5, exhale for 7. Progressive muscle relaxation—tensing and releasing muscles—can release tension. Take a short walk or listen to calming music. Journaling about what’s stressing you can help process it. If stress feels constant, a counselor can help. Want a relaxation technique to try?13. Original: Why do I feel like my emotions are out of control sometimes?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, why do my emotions feel so hard to manage at times?

b. What causes my emotions to feel uncontrollable, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, why do I struggle to keep my feelings in check?

Answer: Feeling like emotions are out of control can stem from stress, fatigue, or unprocessed triggers. Check for physical cues like lack of sleep or hunger, which amplify emotions. Journaling about when these moments happen can reveal patterns. Mindfulness, like a 5-minute meditation, can help you observe emotions calmly. If this persists, a therapist can explore underlying causes. Want a simple mindfulness exercise?14. Original: Can you recommend coping strategies for dealing with anxiety?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, what are some ways to handle anxiety?

b. How can I cope with feeling anxious, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, can you suggest strategies to manage my anxiety?

Answer: Coping with anxiety starts with grounding techniques. Try the 5-4-3-2-1 method: name 5 things you see, 4 you touch, 3 you hear, 2 you smell, 1 you taste. Deep breathing (inhale 4, exhale 6) can calm your nervous system. Journaling about your worries can reduce their intensity. Regular exercise or talking to a therapist can help long-term. Want to try a grounding exercise?15. Original: Raska Mon, how do I stop dwelling on negative feelings for too long?

Rephrasings:

a. How can I avoid lingering on negative emotions, Raska Mon?

b. Raska Mon, what's the best way to stop focusing on bad feelings?

c. Can you help me move past negative emotions quickly, Raska Mon?

Answer: To stop dwelling on negative feelings, try redirecting your focus. Use a distraction like a 10-minute walk or a hobby. Write down the feeling and its cause, then challenge it—ask, "Is this thought true?" Mindfulness meditation can help you let go of ruminations. If you're stuck, a therapist can help break the cycle. Want a journaling prompt to shift your focus?16. Original: What should I do when I feel emotionally drained and can't focus?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, how do I handle feeling emotionally exhausted and unfocused?

b. What can I do if I'm emotionally drained and can't concentrate, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, how should I cope with emotional fatigue and lack of focus?

Answer: Emotional drain can make focusing tough. Take a short break: try 5 minutes of deep breathing or a quick nap. Hydrate and eat a small, healthy snack to boost energy. Journaling about what's draining you can clarify next steps. Prioritize small tasks to regain momentum. If this persists, a counselor can help. Want a quick energy-boosting exercise?17. Original: How can I express emotions constructively without hurting others?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, how do I share my feelings without upsetting others?

b. What's the best way to express emotions safely, Raska Mon?

c. Can you help me communicate my feelings without causing harm, Raska Mon?

Answer: Expressing emotions constructively starts with “I” statements, like “I feel upset when…” to avoid blame. Pause to breathe and clarify your feelings before speaking. Journaling first can help you articulate emotions calmly. Practice active listening to ensure mutual understanding. A therapist can teach communication skills if needed. Want a sample “I” statement to try?18. Original: Raska Mon, are there breathing exercises to help me stay calm in tough moments?

Rephrasings:

a. Can you suggest breathing techniques for staying calm, Raska Mon?

b. Raska Mon, what breathing exercises can help me during stressful times?

c. How can I use breathing to stay calm in tough situations, Raska Mon?

Answer: Breathing exercises are great for staying calm. Try box breathing: inhale for 4 seconds, hold for 4, exhale for 4, hold for 4, and repeat for 2 minutes. Or use diaphragmatic breathing: inhale deeply through your nose for 5, exhale through your mouth for 7. Practice daily to build the habit. Apps like Calm can guide you. Want to try one now?19. Original: What’s the best way to shift my mood when I’m feeling down?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, how can I improve my mood when I’m feeling low?

b. Can you suggest ways to lift my spirits when I’m down, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, what should I do to change my mood when I’m feeling sad?

Answer: Shifting a low mood starts with small actions. Try a 10-minute walk or listening to upbeat music. Write down three things you’re grateful for to reframe your perspective. Connecting with a friend or engaging in a hobby can also help. If low moods persist, a therapist can explore underlying causes. Want a gratitude exercise to try?20. Original: How can I build habits to regulate my emotions better over time?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, what habits can I develop to manage my emotions better?

b. How do I create routines for better emotional control, Raska Mon?

c. Can you help me build long-term habits for emotional regulation, Raska Mon?

Answer: Building emotional regulation habits takes consistency. Start with 5 minutes of daily mindfulness meditation to observe emotions. Journal nightly about your feelings and triggers to spot patterns. Practice deep breathing during stress to stay calm. Set small, achievable goals, like one coping strategy per week. A therapist can help refine these habits. Want a sample habit plan?Category 3: Self-Confidence and Self-Esteem21. Original: Raska Mon, how can I build confidence in my abilities?

a. What can I do to feel more confident in my skills, Raska Mon?

b. Raska Mon, how do I boost my belief in my abilities?

c. Can you suggest ways to grow my confidence, Raska Mon?

Answer: Building confidence starts with small wins. Set achievable goals, like completing a task daily, and celebrate them. Reflect on past successes—write down three things you've done well. Practice positive self-talk, like "I'm capable of learning." Seek feedback from supportive people to affirm your strengths. A coach or therapist can help if doubts persist. Want a confidence-building exercise?22. Original: Why do I keep doubting myself, and how can I stop?

a. Raska Mon, why am I always second-guessing myself, and how do I stop?

b. What causes my self-doubt, and how can I overcome it, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, how do I stop doubting myself all the time?

Answer: Self-doubt often comes from fear of failure or past criticism. Challenge it by listing evidence of your successes, even small ones. Replace negative thoughts with affirmations, like "I'm doing my best." Journaling about doubts can reveal their roots. Mindfulness can help you observe doubts without believing them. A therapist can address deeper causes. Want a thought-challenging exercise?23. Original: What can I do to feel better about my self-image?

a. Raska Mon, how can I improve how I see myself?

b. What's the best way to feel good about my self-image, Raska Mon?

c. Can you help me boost my self-image, Raska Mon?

Answer: Improving self-image starts with self-compassion. Write down three qualities you like about yourself daily. Avoid negative self-talk by countering it with kind thoughts, like "I'm enough." Surround yourself with supportive people who uplift you. Engage in activities that make you feel capable. A therapist can help if self-image struggles persist. Want a self-compassion exercise?24. Original: Raska Mon, how do I stop comparing myself to others?

Rephrasings:

a. How can I avoid comparing myself to others, Raska Mon?

b. Raska Mon, what can I do to stop feeling inferior to others?

c. Can you help me quit comparing myself to people, Raska Mon?

Answer: Stopping comparisons involves focusing on your own path. Limit social media if it triggers envy, and instead list three unique strengths you have. Practice gratitude for your journey—write down one thing daily you're proud of. Affirm your worth with statements like "My path is valid." Therapy can help if comparisons persist. Want a gratitude practice to try?25. Original: Can you suggest ways to feel proud of my accomplishments?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, how can I take pride in what I've achieved?

b. What are ways to feel good about my successes, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, can you help me celebrate my accomplishments?

Answer: Feeling proud starts with acknowledging your efforts. Keep a "win" journal—write down one accomplishment daily, even small ones. Share successes with supportive friends or family. Reward yourself with something meaningful, like a treat or rest. Reflect on how far you've come. A therapist can help if you struggle to feel proud. Want a sample journal prompt?26. Original: How do I become more assertive without feeling guilty?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, how can I be assertive without guilt?

b. What's the best way to stand up for myself without feeling bad, Raska Mon?

c. Can you help me be more assertive and feel okay about it, Raska Mon?

Answer: Being assertive without guilt involves clear communication. Use "I" statements, like "I need…" to express yourself respectfully. Practice small assertions, like setting a boundary, to build confidence. Remind yourself that your needs matter. Role-playing with a friend or therapist can help. If guilt persists, therapy can explore its roots. Want an assertiveness practice?27. Original: What should I do if I feel insecure in social situations?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, how do I handle feeling insecure around others?

b. What can I do about social insecurities, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, how should I cope with feeling unsure in social settings?

Answer: Feeling insecure socially is common. Prepare a few conversation starters to feel more at ease. Focus on listening rather than performing—it reduces pressure. Positive self-talk, like "I'm enough," can boost confidence. Start with small social interactions to build comfort. A therapist can help with social anxiety if needed. Want a conversation starter idea?28. Original: Raska Mon, how can I boost my self-esteem when I'm feeling low?

Rephrasings:

a. What can I do to improve my self-esteem when I'm down, Raska Mon?

b. Raska Mon, how do I lift my confidence when I feel bad about myself?

c. Can you suggest ways to boost my self-worth, Raska Mon?

Answer: Boosting self-esteem starts with small acts of self-care. Write down three things you like about yourself daily. Engage in a favorite activity to feel capable. Surround yourself with supportive people. Avoid negative self-talk by challenging it with evidence of your worth. Therapy can help if low self-esteem persists. Want a self-esteem exercise?29. Original: Are there affirmations that can help me feel more confident?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, what affirmations can boost my confidence?

b. Can you suggest positive affirmations for self-confidence, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, are there affirmations to help me feel stronger in myself?

Answer: Affirmations can rewire your mindset. Try saying daily: “I am capable and worthy,” “I trust my abilities,” or “I grow stronger every day.” Write them down and repeat them in front of a mirror. Pair them with evidence, like a recent success. Apps like ThinkUp can customize affirmations. A therapist can help tailor them. Want to create a personal affirmation?30. Original: How do I handle setbacks without losing faith in myself?

Rephrasings:

a. Raska Mon, how can I deal with failures without doubting myself?

b. What should I do when setbacks shake my confidence, Raska Mon?

c. Raska Mon, how do I stay strong after a setback?

Answer: Handling setbacks involves reframing them as learning opportunities. Reflect on what went wrong and one lesson learned—write it down. Remind yourself of past successes to rebuild faith. Practice self-compassion, like “I’m doing my best.” Small steps toward recovery can restore confidence. A therapist can help if setbacks feel overwhelming. Want a reflection exercise?Category 4: Stress Management31. Original: Raska Mon, how can I manage stress from work or school better?

14-Day Relationship Health Check for Couples (10 Questions per Topic)

Instructions: Each day for 14 days, focus on one topic and answer its 10 questions based on your relationship over the past week. Select the option that best applies for each question: 0 (Never/Not at all/Constantly/Very difficult), 1 (Rarely/Somewhat/Often/Difficult), 2 (Sometimes/Mostly/Sometimes/Manageable), 3 (Often/Completely/Rarely/Easily). Each day's questions should take 2–3 minutes. At the end of 14 days, sum your scores (0–420) to assess your relationship's health. Note: For questions where lower frequency (e.g., conflict) indicates healthier dynamics, scoring is reversed (0 = Constantly, 3 = Rarely).Day 1: Open CommunicationPurpose: Assesses emotional safety and clarity in sharing thoughts and feelings, a cornerstone of effective therapy.How often do you and your partner openly share your feelings without fear of judgment?

Total Score and RecommendationsTotal Score: Sum your scores across all 14 days (140 questions, 0–420).

Scoring Breakdown (adjusted proportionally to the original 0–30 scale): 336–420 (Strong Relationship, 80–100%): Your relationship shows robust strengths in communication, trust, intimacy, and mutual support. Continue nurturing these areas, and consider discussing specific growth opportunities with a therapist if desired.

224–335 (Moderate Strengths, 53–79%): Your relationship has solid foundations but may benefit from targeted improvements in areas like conflict resolution or emotional intimacy. Therapy can help address specific challenges.

112–223 (Areas of Concern, 27–52%): Notable challenges exist across multiple dynamics, such as trust, respect, or quality time. Couples therapy could provide tools to strengthen your relationship.

0–111 (Significant Challenges, 0–26%): Your relationship faces significant strain in several areas. Seeking professional support from a therapist is highly recommended to address underlying issues.

Notes for TherapistsThe 140 questions provide a detailed, longitudinal view of the couple's relationship across 14 key dynamics, enabling therapists to identify patterns and prioritize focus areas (e.g., high conflict frequency, low emotional intimacy).

Each day's 10 questions are concise and varied, ensuring engagement while covering nuanced aspects of each topic.

The scoring system remains consistent with the original test, with reversed scoring for questions where lower frequency (e.g., conflicts, stress) indicates healthier dynamics.

Couples can complete the assessment individually, allowing therapists to compare responses and identify discrepancies in perception, which can guide therapy discussions.

This expanded assessment aligns with therapeutic priorities, offering a comprehensive tool for counselors while keeping the daily task manageable and engaging for couples.

Total Score and RecommendationsTotal Score: Sum your scores across all 14 days (140 questions, 0–420). 350–420: Strong family health. Your family demonstrates excellent communication, trust, and support. Continue nurturing these strengths and consider sharing strategies with others.

280–349: Good family dynamics with room for improvement. Your family has a solid foundation but may benefit from focusing on lower-scoring areas (e.g., conflict resolution, quality time). Reflect on specific questions and discuss small changes as a family.

210–279: Moderate family health. Your family may face challenges in areas like emotional closeness or stress management. Identify low-scoring topics and explore ways to improve, such as family meetings or professional support.

Below 210: Indicates potential struggles in family dynamics. Low scores suggest difficulties in multiple areas. Consider family counseling or open discussions to address challenges and build stronger connections.
